

ARCHOS with Sikur delivering the GranitePhone The user privacy secured Smartphone

ARCHOS through its subsidiary company Logic Instrument today announces the forthcoming availability of Pre-Orders the GranitePhone through its partnership with Sikur, allowing to entering in the global market of private communications, where the need for data protection for smartphones is in high demand.

The GranitePhone, unveiled at Mobile World Congress in Barcelona, has since attracted the attention of government and defense agencies, as well as executives and consumers concerned about data privacy according to Sikur information – a rapidly growing market.

With a 5inch screen Full HD, Granite OS, 4G and a 16MP camera this phone has all the latest hardware, but with an unrivalled focus on security, eliminating loopholes that could allow data theft and espionage.

The security architecture has been carefully designed by Sikur with multiple layers of protection in order to diminish security issues whilst still delivering the best in mobile technology today.

For additional flexibility, the device's data storage, is protected in an encrypted form in the Sikur cloud so that GranitePhone users are not limited to where they access their content.

Users can also have access to their data do so from a computer and other mobile devices, such as Android and iOS thought Sikur app, which ensures great flexibility without compromising privacy.

“ARCHOS, through its subsidiary Logic Instrument is pleased to have been selected as industrial and development partner for this project as the demand for secured mobile solution is increasing” says Loïc POIRIER CEO of ARCHOS.

"With GranitePhone, you can create a corporate digital environment, secure in the exchange of strategic information, without compromising the productivity and speed offered by mobile devices," says Frederico D'Avila, CEO of Sikur.
